Judge Chambers has been asked to come to Roanoke in time for deliberations to begin at 9:30 o'clock next Monday morning.

But the pauper on the estate refused to have anything to do with such parvenus as the Torlonias, accustomed as they had been to the time immemorial to be ruled over by patricians of ancient lineage. The Torlonias had nothing but trouble with the place, and were glad to get rid of it by sale. To Princess Eugenie Ruspoli, who spent large sums in restoring it, and equipping it with modern conveniences, comforts and luxuries, making it her principal home. Naturally, the princess contested the will of her husband, and recovered all her property, and finally won her.

Don Philip Orsini is a very fine looking man of sixty-nine, with a long snow-white beard, who lost his wife, a Countess Hoyos of Hungary (sister of the Count Hoyos who spent a number of years in Washington as Austrian envoy), in 1905. She had for years been separated from her husband, who by almost insane extravagance and by reckless speculation, especially in Roman real estate, had almost wholly wrecked the once grandiose fortune of his house. Indeed, he was placed under judicial tutelage, the remnants of his property being vested in the hands of trustees, and was suspended from the exercise of his hereditary office as prince and assistant of the Holy Seat, which the head of the house of Orsini has shared for hundreds of years with the chief of the house of Colonna. These two offices of prince assistant of the Holy Seat are the principal lay dignities of the papacy.

Don Philip's marriage to Princess Eugenie Ruspoli will have the effect of placing him once more on his financial feet, and it is possible that in that event Pius X. may restore to him his prerogatives as prince assistant of the Holy Seat, more especially as the new head of the house of Colonna has declined to sacrifice his seat in the Senate and his commission in the army, which was suitably necessary for him to do before taking up his duties at the Vatican.

Don Philip is descended in a direct male line from Orsini Orsini, who was Senator of Rome at the time of the First Crusade. Indeed, from that time forth, until Pius X. became the capital of the Catholic Church, the Orsini family has been so intimately identified with the fortunes of the Eternal City, as that of Orsini, which has furnished several popes to the Catholic Church, notably Stephen II, who reigned in the middle of the eighth century, Nicholas III, and Benedict IV. In olden times the Colonnas and the Orsini were always at war with one another, and the respective palaces were fortresses, all Rome being divided into two camps by their rivalry. The Orsini have still the right of styling themselves "cousins" of the sovereign, at the courts of the Quirinal, Dresden, Brussels, Madrid and Vienna, and possessed similar prerogatives in France when the latter was still a monarchy.

In the days of Pius IX, the Orsini palace in the Via Monte Savello, was one of the centers of social life of the great world, and renowned throughout Europe for its priceless treasures of art and history. It is still one of the landmarks of the Eternal City, and rises from the ruins of that Marcellus Theatre which was built by Emperor Augustus in memory of his favorite nephew. But the contents of the palace have been dispersed, even the very archives of the house, covering a period considerably over a thousand

WIDOWED PRINCESS IS ENGAGED TO DUKE

Former Georgia Girl Will Outrank Every American Girl Who Has Ever Married Italian.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENOY.
FROM ROME comes the report of the engagement of the widowed American Princess Eugenie Ruspoli to Don Philip Orsini, nineteenth Duke of Gravina, Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, and head of the historic house of Orsini. Princess Ruspoli, who, as wife of Don Philip Orsini, will outrank every other American woman who has ever married an Italian, was formerly Miss Eugenie Berry, of Oakhill, Ga., was married in 1891 to Don Philip Orsini, a very wealthy tobacco grower of the South, of the name of Bruton, who on his death left her his large fortune. She thereupon married at Washington, in 1902, the late Prince of Orsini, when he was attached to the Italian embassy there, Cardinal Martinielli, then the apostolic delegate in the United States, performing the ceremony.

This marriage was not altogether a happy one, and when Don Enrico Ruspoli died, it was found that he had bequeathed his fine residence at Rome and the castle of Nemi, purchased, restored and furnished with her money, to his brother Bartolomeo.

The castle is one of the most celebrated of the great medieval fortresses of Italy, perched on the top of a rocky hill, and the castle of Nemi, purchased, restored and furnished with her money, to his brother Bartolomeo.

helmhof was, when William ascended the throne, about the most unpromising portion of his empire, consisting of a swampy, useless collection of postdiluvian swamps, interspersed with stones and sand dunes, dotted here and there with stunted bushes. William set to work to reclaim it, and after spending something over $250,000 in this work, has managed to convert it into one of the finest cattle-raising farms in Germany. The sandy wastes and swamps have been transformed into rich pasture, and by the crossing of European with oriental breeds of cattle, notably Indian, he has achieved extraordinary results. Wilhelmshof has already yielded enough to pay off all the initial cost of reclamation, and now furnishes a very handsome annual revenue to the Emperor's private exchequer.

So remunerative has the venture proved, that some three or four years ago it was purchased for almost nothing by a syndicate of bankers, who, bordering on the Frisches Haff, an arm of the sea nearly fifty miles long, and is rapidly converting them into rich pasture. Two years ago he started a couple of hundred head of German Southwest Africa, and also carries on ostrich farming there on a very large scale.

EASY METHOD TO PREVENT TYPHOID

State Board of Health Urges Vaccination, and Has Vaccine for All.

In view of the prevalence of typhoid fever, the State Board of Health has had all its employees vaccinated for typhoid, and has on hand a large supply of the vaccine for distribution at cost to persons who wish to secure immunity from this disease.

The board was led to vaccinate its inspectors and other employees in view of the fact that they are forced to go into sections of the State where typhoid fever is prevalent, and are thus inevitably exposed to the dangers of infection. The board unqualifiedly recommends the vaccine, especially for those who travel or live in communities where typhoid has occurred this year.

"Typhoid vaccine," says the circular of the board, "has shown its right to be regarded as a great preventive of disease. It is not, of course, a remedy, but taken before infection it will give absolute protection for one year after injection."

The popular belief that typhoid vaccine is still in its experimental stage is still justified. In the United States army, more than $2,000,000 have been expended, and the typhoid rate has dropped from 3.93 per cent to 0.3 per cent. More than 61,000 British soldiers have been immunized in India, and the typhoid rate has been reduced 75 per cent. Last year, when there was danger of a general outbreak of typhoid in Memphis, Tenn., 26,000 were given the vaccine, and the city was saved from a serious loss of life. More striking still has been the experience at Baltimore, especially in its hospital population, where three hundred and nine nurses and attendants who were vaccinated escaped the fever altogether, while of eighty-two nurses and attendants not vaccinated, seven died, and the fever in spite of all precautions.

"There is practically no inconvenience about the vaccination, though the reaction varies considerably with the individual. Many persons will have no other discomfort than a sore arm for a day or two, and in the worst case, the vaccinated person is generally not sick for more than a day."

"Three treatments
